That's good, because it rolls with every curve - no cup holders! Last week, I realized that I was living on borrowed time. A visit to the gas-mart left me with a cup of paper coffee with an ill-fitting top that, less than 100 yards from the station, was soaking in my floor. HistorySome readers may be old enough to remember when cars came without cup holders. Now some vans have up to 13 (and probably more), but before Chrysler introduced them in the 1980s, you sat with a cup on your lap (or watched your drink spill over the dashboard as you left the drive through). The proliferation of drive throughs by McDonald's has created demand. From this came the modern travel cup. Oh, what a different world we lived in. For those trying to get over time (but stuck with an old model car), discount stores sold a host of after-sales solutions. My mother had a plastic travel mug that broke into a base - a base stuck to the dashboard with double-sided duct tape. In my father's car, an automatic Chevy Quote with a bump (driveshaft) in the middle of the ground (in front of the bench seat), there was a box that velcro you on the carpet. The box had a small place for garbage and two cup holders. A friend's car had the same thing, but with sandbags on either side keep it in place. SolutionThere were a lot of solutions on but most involved after market purchases a bit like the ones above. None of them matched me or my car. The best solution was a small cardboard box with a hole cut in the top for the cup. He was sitting in the passenger seat. I was about to use this (I rarely have passengers) when I thought about just screwing a tablespoon to the dashboard. Then I was inspired by something similar to that. Are you tired of spilling your drinks, but don't buy or can not find a cup holder, then use only 2 things per drink (can or cup) and a pair of binoculars. You need a glass in a box or cup like plastic, but not glass cups because they won't fit and they will break/slide and then break. You can use any type of binoculars like those in the image. Now just open your binoculars and put your drink between the binoculars, then close them and then you have a cup holder. Available in black and silver, this holder stores 24 cups. How we chose k-cup holders take many different forms. Some are self-contained units and others are fixed containers that make a semi-permanent home in a kitchen. To help us better understand the different offerings, we have chosen a few key areas to focus on: Organization One of the joys of single-service coffee machines is the variety they allow users to do. Rather than making a coffee pan from a blend of coffee grounds, each cup can be a different drink. Coffee producers take advantage of this and make many different unique flavours. K-Cup holders allow you to organize this diversity of cups as they wish. Drawer-style coffee dosing holders can allow users to see all their K cups at the same time. If the product has several drawers, users may not necessarily see them all at the same time, but each drawer can be organized in a way that makes choosing a coffee pod quick and easy. Stability There are a few styles of coffee pods that are commonly found. The drawer-style coffee dosing holder is located horizontally and is therefore not really in danger of falling. Drawer-style coffee racks, however, can be difficult to use if one of the components is misaligned. Carousel K-Cup holders can be structurally robust because they are made of one piece. These are more assured of not malfunctioning, although some are made of multiple parts and can therefore collapse if they are overturned. A K-Cup carousel is more likely to fall in general because of its vertical design. Style One of the biggest issues facing a person looking to buy a coffee pod is the potential visibility of these products. Some consumers prefer to have their coffee pods visibly and easily accessible and not in a drawer. For them, it is a carousel that makes the most sense. This carousel, however, can need to match the decoration of nearby appliances or the kitchen in general. Drawer-style coffee pod holders can live right under the K-Cup machine itself. This will make it more visible in a kitchen and may therefore require some style matching. This style fortunately tends to have many different color options for you to choose from. AdviceNo sure the holder of the K-Cup has you the right? Here are some quick guidelines: How often do you use K-Cups? Just because someone owns a single-purpose coffee machine doesn't mean they'll use it every day. Those who do not K cups can sometimes consider something less annoying, such as a shelf or drawer option. Carousels will collect more dust. How much space do you have on your counter? Carousels have a smaller footprint than drawers, but drawers can usually fit under a K-Cup machine or other appliances. Coffee pod holders are a good way to save space, but involve a more complicated assembly and may not last as long as other options. Get the latest offers, discounts, reviews and gifts!
